Five financial lessons for women

There is still a significant gender gap when it comes to important issues like financial security. There are many reasons for this, some of which are complex and embedded in societal imbalances, and others which are simple and easier to solve for. While a generalisation, I have found that women tend not to talk freely about topics such as... Read more

Do your financial health audit with this checklist

We lead busy and stressful lives, but to stay on top of our finances, we have to do a financial audit at least once or twice a year. To keep track of your finances, here is a checklist to make sure... Read more

Adding one 30-minute workout to their week could change women's odds of developing depression, study finds

A study, published in the International Journal of Physical Medicine & Rehabilitation, shows that even moderate increases in exercise could help prevent about one-fifth of cases of depression among women. The... Read more

How to get better at managing stress

Stress isn't all bad. Stress helps us avoid danger, adjust to new situations, and cope with challenges; think of it as a normal reaction that ignites certain physical and mental responses in the body, according to the Cleveland Clinic... Read more

Legal talk: Freedom of expression. Be careful what you post on social media

It is easy to express your views on social media platforms and not always think of the consequences.

With the rise of the era of social media, the airing of public views has become an extremely controversial topic. Yes, everyone has the right to freedom of expression, but it does not mean that you can always just say what you... Read more
