Women in business: accelerating action in 2026

The SNG Grant Thornton Women in Business 2025 Report gave us much to celebrate - but also a reality check. While South Africa continues to lead globally in advancing women into senior management, true parity remains a generation away. If we stay on the current trajectory, women entering the workforce today will still wait more than 25 years before experiencing gender-balanced leadership in mid-market businesses... Read more

Why women need a personal board of directors

Most companies would never dream of operating without a board of directors. Boards provide oversight, challenge assumptions, offer expertise, identify risks, and help leaders make better decisions. They exist because even the most capable executives benefit from trusted counsel and diverse perspectives. Yet many professionals attempt to navigate their careers alone... Read more

How to address a career gap on your resume

If you're among the thousands of women now looking to re-enter the workforce in, you'll need to know how to address that employment gap on your resume. Here are five tips on how to convince employers that you're ready to return to work. Highlight relevant experience you gained while unemployed. To make a career gap less apparent, fill it with other relevant experience. For example, if you took an online course related...

SHE LEADS:

The Courage to Lead Ethically
When It Matters Most

GWII LEADERWALK SERIES PRESENTS

She Leads: The Courage to Lead Ethically When It Matters Most

Leadership is not defined solely by the ability to deliver results, influence others or occupy positions of power. Its true test comes when doing the right thing is difficult, inconvenient, unpopular - or costly. Against a backdrop of declining institutional trust, corruption, rapid technological change and increasing stakeholder expectations, ethical leadership has never been more important. This keynote explores
